Happy Friday! (Yes, it's Friday for those of you who may have lost track.) We hope you're staying healthy and sane out there. Our team is still working hard to bring you fresh content, like a tour of a Dallas dream home and an interview with a young entrepreneur. We're also finding great content from some of our friends! Here are a few things we're loving this week:

— Hudson Valley Lighting just debuted a collection with interior designer Kelly Behun. There are over thirty new pieces inspired by Behun's style. She's an avid student and collector of ceramics, so these pieces have a strong, sculptural quality. "I think lighting should be able to hold its own in a room, looking just as beautiful switched off as it does on," she said. You can shop the collection here.

— LA-based designer, Genevieve Trousdale is hosting weekly Zoom webinars that touch on the overarching theme of #SOS: Save Our Suppliers. Each week covers a new topic and is free to the public. You can register to tune into the next webinar by clicking here!

— RILEY Home's new linen sheets are here, just in time for spring and summer. The brand is the first name in luxury bedding & bath products from a fourth-generation textile mill in Portugal, and their sheets have the casual look and feel of linen, but the luxurious soft touch of percale.

— Craving a loungewear update? Richer-Poorer just launched the cutest new pieces, from sweatshorts to a wide-leg pants, both made from super soft French terry. Who says you can't have cute sweats?!

— We're feeling very inspired by Athena Calderona's Instagram these days. Her recent "Design Therapy" episode with Nate Berkus just went live and we're loving their candid discussion on life and design.

— Even in quarantine, a Monday is still a Monday. If you've found yourself struggling to keep up with work, pop over to Wit & Delight for tips on creating a home office you'll actually want to work in.
